Every Vote Really Counts. On January 4, people across Virginia watched an important state election get decided in a very unusual way. With news cameras rolling, an election official reached into a bowl, pulled out one of the two names inside, and announced the winner: David Yancey. The drawing was the culmination of a two-month battle in a neck-and-neck race between Republican incumbent Yancey and Democratic challenger Shelly Simonds for a seat in the Virginia House of Delegates.

If every vote counts, then the politicians should ensure their commercials clearly identify who they are. The visually impaired, or those just listening to television, need to know who really wants your vote. Frankly, I'm not sure if this is right or wrong but, I partly base my decision on how many negative commercials the candidate runs.
